Mauro Giacconi

*El corazón de mi pueblo
tiene un destino de nube, es niebla que en lluvia estalla y arroyo que al cielo sube, multiplicada frescura
para calmar al sediento, rocío en versos colgado en los perfiles del viento; mi pueblo ríe, mi pueblo canta, todos los pueblos en su garganta.*

El corazón de mi pueblo,
Alfredo Zitarrosa

[My people's heart
has the fate of a cloud it is a fog that bursts in the rain and a stream that rises to the sky multiplied freshness
to calm the thirsty
a dew hanging on verses in the profiles of the wind my people laughs, my people cries all the peoples in its throat
'My people's heart', Alfredo Zitarrosa]

The waste, the work, the rest, the remnant, the swill, the memory, the lie, the heart, the evidence, the obsolete, the weight, the overweight, the song, the fracture, the overflow, the anarchic, the regulated, an oxymoron, the individual, the body, the asemic, the shape of a cloud, its un-shape, that transits, static, without borders, amorphous, unstable, that assembles, disassembles and reassembles constantly, that will be rain, downpour, storm, collapse.

Mauro Giacconi

Tiene un destino de nube.

NF/ NIEVES FERNÁNDEZ presents Mauro Giacconi's, (Argentina, 1977, lives and works in Mexico) first solo exhibition in Spain.

'Tiene un destino de nube' [Has the fate of a cloud], whose title detaches from a song by the Uruguayan singer-songwriter Alfredo Zitarrosa, 'El corazón de mi pueblo' [My people's heart], is an exhibition that explores Giacconi's most recent works, a production that includes an extensive series of drawings on second-hand book pages, and an installation made with the rests of a building located at a corner of Chimalpopoca and Bolívar's streets in Mexico City, one block away from the artist's studio, prior to the latest earthquake that shook the city on September 19th, 2017.

In this exhibition, the works of Giacconi explore and reflect on the tensions between memory, deceit, territory, fragility, and appearance, manipulating and transforming objects in an effort to multiply their meanings and generate polysemic images. These images, in turn, are to be completed by the public, through their bodies, their experiences and their own decisions. In this sense, the audience will have the opportunity to transform, by chance or fate, the experiences and landscapes of the exhibition.

The ruins of the building that collapsed during the earthquake are a starting point for Giacconi, who intervenes this rubble and mixes it with other debris found in Madrid. This action proposes a confusion between reality and fiction, and memory and deceit. The rubble with no historical burden is ordinary, recovered from random constructions, whereas the one intervened by the artist has a powerful narrative related to the natural disaster and the negligence of a corrupt system that, ultimately, culminated in the death of dozens of migrant women who previously lived there, undocumented and exploited by trafficking.

In another dual operation, Giacconi presents artworks in which he decomposes books sold by their weight, rather than their contents. These books are no longer information container, but recycling or decoration material. The artist dismantles these objects, subverts their contents, rearranges them without hierarchy and intervenes them using graphite, pigments and eraser. The result of this creative process is a formal cloud that plays with the margins of the book pages and alters the perception of these ordinary objects.

Mauro Giacconi has had solo exhibitions at BMoCA (Boulder Museum of Contemporary Art), MAMBA (Museo de Arte Moderno de Buenos Aires), Museo Universitario del Chopo, and group shows at the Gregory Allicar Museum of Art, Centro Cultural Recoleta and Museo del Palacio de Bellas Artes in Mexico City. His works are included among collections such as: SPACE Collection, OMI International School of Art, Bemis Center for Contemporary Art, in the USA, and Colección Jumex, in Mexico. Furthermore, Giacconi has been awarded with several prizes, such as: Phillips Prize for Young Talents, within the Argentina and Latin America's rounds, Painting Salon UADE, Argentina's National Drawing Salon, and ArteBA-Petrobrás Prize in Argentina.
